

Do I need a proofread or copy-edit?

This simple diagram tells you where in the process each skill belongs. If you are an author looking for improvement to your work, you need a copy editor, but not necessarily a proofreader. Proofreading skill is employed for texts that have been copy-edited and are to be published. So, all authors need copy editors but not all authors need proofreaders. We have included suggested starting rates per word and per hour also, based on research done by one of our members in 2022.

